F.W. Olin Building, Various Classrooms
- “The Marches of John Philip Sousa”
 Paul Lehman, Professor Emeritus and former Senior Associate Dean of the School of Music at the University of Michigan
 The presentation will feature some of the best-known of Sousa’s marches together with background information designed to increase appreciation of the important contributions of “America’s March King.” John Philip Sousa (1854-1932) was a genuine American hero known in his day as a great composer, a great entertainer and a great American patriot. His march, “The Stars and Stripes Forever,” is a masterpiece by any standard and is the most popular march ever written. His appeal was universal and he, perhaps better than any other individual, symbolized America during the period when our country was emerging as a world power.
F.W. Olin Building, Room 222, Sponsored by Senior University Georgetown
- “Wheels and Deals: A Survey of Television Game Shows”
 Alison Marr, Assistant Professor of Mathematics
 What is a game show? What is the $64,000 Question? Who is Monty Hall? Would you like the final answers to these and many other questions? Then “come on down” as Dr. Marr explores the fascinating world of television game shows by studying their history then attempting to define their genres. With the help of alumni and guests, the group will study optimal strategies of various game shows to determine the best way to win big bucks.
F.W. Olin Building, Room 322
- “Forbidden Fruit: Religious Conceptions of Food”
 Elaine Craddock, Professor of Religion
 Food can be used to connect with the sacred, feed divine beings through ritual offerings, and transform human self physically, morally and spiritually. Religious conceptions of food and drink infuse cultural ideas about the human body, and about the relationship between humans and the sacredness. Using a variety of texts and films, Dr. Craddock invites alumni and guests to help her investigate specific rituals and traditions in some of the world’s major religions, decipher some useful cross-cultural themes, and gain a broad understanding of religious concepts and behaviors surrounding food.

Classes Without Quizzes – P.M. Sessions

Open to all. Lifelong learning is part of the Southwestern Experience. The Association of Southwestern University Alumni provides opportunities for alumni and guests to continue their intellectual growth.

F.W. Olin Building, Various Classrooms

“Geology: The Phantom Science That Shapes Human History”

Donald Beaumont, retired geologist

Five geological processes and four geological events discovered in the last 50 years have shaped human history from the advent of Homo sapiens, to the rise of the world’s six earliest civilizations and to the ensuing 2500-year struggle for the iron, coal and oil resources of the five major continents.

F.W. Olin Building, Room 111, Sponsored by Senior University Georgetown

“In the Spotlight: Balloon Boy and Other Fame Junkies”

Eileen Meyer Russell, Associate Professor of Music

Do you have an urge to be in the center of attention or do you prefer watching the action from the safety of the audience? Do you get a rush of adrenaline thinking about stepping into the spotlight, or is your heart beating quickly because you are running away? This session will study the obsession of fame and the thrill of performing—literally and virtually. Alumni and guests will study the lives and careers of performing artists and performance venues for the “person next door” – reality TV, Facebook, YouTube, and Karaoke.

F.W. Olin Building, Room 222

“How to Study Popular Culture” CANCELLED

For most people, popular culture is a huge part of our lives, from technologies like cell phones and iPods, to movies, television and even fashion. Typical reactions to popular culture assume it is superficial “fluff,” at best a mindless escape and at worst an evil influence contributing to the rapid decay of society. Dr. Thornton’s session surveys some alternative attitudes toward popular culture, taking an in-depth look at its complexity and diversity.
